LIFE LESSONS FROM A DEATH INVESTIGATOR

How To Live Like There's No Tomorrow

It's not every day that you'll have the opportunity to hear a veteran death investigator share the valuable lessons she's learned about life. And it's even more rare to be able to take such truly unique lessons and immediately apply them to your own circumstances.

Sue Jacques spent nearly two decades performing the forensic medical investigation of thousands of unexpected, unnatural, and violent deaths during her tenure at the medical examiner's office. From murders to motor vehicle accidents, drugs to decapitation, and suicides to sexual asphyxia, Sue has seen too many examples of people paying the ultimate price for incivility, insecurity, and indecision: death. She is now on a mission to reverse rudeness, revive respect, and create more courteous, confident, and compassionate communities and corporate cultures.

Nothing is off limits in this frank and inspirational keynote, and audience members will be moved to take personal responsibility for enhancing the degree of kindness, empathy, professionalism, and respect in their lives ... before it's too late.

Sue will touch on:

- The significance of genuine gratitude
- The unintended repercussions of disrespect
- How to discover your purpose(s) in life
- What your biggest assests are
- Simple ways to extend compassion
- How to avoid regrets by making clear choices
